Greece Leads the Way

In these times of severe financial hardship, the decision by the Greek government, to round up and deport illegal immigrants must be applauded. No pussy-footing about with long drawn-out legal appeals, if an immigrant entered the country illegally, then out they go! Doesn't it seem strange to see a European government putting the welfare of its own people first? A lesson, the coalition needs to learn. Quickly.

Police State?

The police harassment of Veteran nationalist, Colin Todd is clearly unacceptable. Mr Todd is not a terrorist; he does not support political violence, and is not a threat to the State. We hope Mr Todd does pursue his complaint against the police, and urge all nationalists to support him in his battle.

Good Riddance

The speculation that Gerry Gable's Searchlight magazine may fold is good news for democracy. Over the years, Searchlight has been instrumental in people being harassed at their homes, and losing their jobs, simply because their political opinions were not approved by Searchlight. Democracy only works, when all political opinions are respected.

Olympic Legacy

There has been much debate about the so-called Olympic legacy. New jobs, new homes and a perceived, renewed vigour in our lives, have all been well promoted. But the media has kept very quiet, about the 21 athletes and officials, who entered Britain for the games, and have not returned home yet. Their visas are valid until November, but most, if not all, are expected to claim political asylum. The missing Olympians are all Africans, from Congo, Guinea, Ivory Coast, Sudan, Ethiopia and Cameroon. If they are granted asylum, they will then be allowed to bring their immediate family to Britain.

That's an Olympic legacy we do not need!

Greece Leads the Way Forward

Thousands of Illegal Immigrants Face Deportation

The Greek authorities are rounding up thousands of suspected illegal immigrants, ready for deportation, after the Minister for Public Order, Nikos Dendias, stated that "mass immigration is bringing the country, "to the brink of collapse".

It is believed that 80% of all illegal immigrants to the European Union enter via Greece, and it is estimated that in excess of 100,000 illegals use this route every year. Not all move on to other EU countries, many opt to stay in Greece. It is estimated that out of a total Greek population of 11 million, over 1 million are illegal immigrants.

With Greece suffering severe financial problems, and high unemployment, Mr Dendias told the Greek media, "Greece cannot afford the invasion of immigrants. Our country is being lost."

Many immigrants are from Asia and Africa, but, there are growing fears of a new influx of immigrants, fleeing the civil war in Syria.

illegals were detained in the Greek capital, Athens, and by the end of the week, 1,600 had been deported.

Golden Dawn: Demanded Mass Deportation Policy at Recent Elections

Immigrant "rights" campaigners are no longer seen protesting on the streets, after police have had to rescue them from furious Greek citizens on several occasions.

"Greece Cannot Afford the Invasion of Immigrants"

Uncontrolled immigration into Greece has been blamed for a rise in street crime, an issue raised in the parliamentary elections, by the Greek patriotic, Golden Dawn party. Golden Dawn gained 7% of the vote, on a platform of zero immigration into Greece, and the mass deportation of all illegal immigrants.

The new policy involves identity checks and swoops by police on the many squatter camps that have been established on the outskirts of many large towns. All of those arrested are detained in custody, and deported within days. In one weekend, over 6000 suspected

Combined Nationalists Disrupt IRA March in Liverpool

Groups of ex-servicemen, joined with members of various nationalist groups including, The National Front, British People's Party, BNP and the North West Infidels, to oppose a march through Liverpool by the Irish Republican, James Larkin Society. The 250 marchers, included extreme left groups such as Unite Against Fascism, and trade unions, had to be protected by a large police presence from nationalist counter demonstrators.

Over 1400 local residents had signed a petition against building the Mosque, but the local Labour council ignored their objections, and granted planning permission. The NF have promised to continue to demonstrate against the planned Mosque, and have promised local residents that they will be standing candidates in the area for the next elections.

Mounted Police Protect Pro-IRA March

The march was halted several times as police officers on horseback, had to force a way through hostile crowds of nationalists. The counter demonstrators complained that the police acted very aggressively towards them, despite their best attempts to keep the counter-demonstration peaceful. Nationalists travelled from Ulster and Scotland to demonstrate their disgust, that Liverpool council had refused to ban the march.

Searchlight Magazine to Close?

The future of the left-wing, anti-Nationalist magazine, Searchlight, is the subject of intense speculation, following news of a takeover of two of its most important fund-raising factions.

For over two decades, effective control of Searchlight magazine, and its fund-raising arms, the Searchlight Educational Trust and Searchlight Information Services, has been with Gerry and Sonia Gable. But following the recruitment of activists' from another Searchlight campaign group, Hope not Hate

No Longer Together: Searchlight Magazine and Hope not Hate

by former Searchlight editor Nick Lowles, Gerry and Sonia lost control of both SET and SIS, with Lowles becoming the Chief Executive Officer of both organisations. A former Labour Party parliamentary candidate, and HNH activist, Ruth Smeeth, displaced Sonia Gable and took over as Company Secretary of both groups.

The takeover has not been without some acrimony, with SET allegedly complaining to the police that Sonia Gable had stolen some £18,000 from SET funds. Also there was the mysterious covert removal from the SET offices of 20 filing cabinets of unspecified documents.

While Searchlight, the magazine, still remains firmly under the control of Gerry and Sonia Gable, its survival will depend on how much funding it can continue to attract. Allegedly, Searchlight, and the HRH/SET/SIS opposition are both lobbying traditional donors such as the Jewish Board of Deputies and various trade unions for funds. Also not helpful, has been the defection of Searchlight's European Editor, Graeme Atkinson, a long-time comrade of Gerry Gable.

Perhaps the final nail in the coffin of Searchlight magazine, could be the launch of an expensive-looking rival magazine, "Hope not Hate" by his rivals. Experienced political observers believe that the tiny left-wing niche market for this type of publication, will not be sufficient to maintain both magazines.

Nick Griffin Joins Residents Protest in Leicester

BNP leader, Nick Griffin, joined local residents in Leicester, protesting over the local council's decision to award the lease of a former scouts hut to a Muslim group for use as a cultural center. Local residents had hoped to turn the building into a boxing club for local children. Over 250 local residents protested that the council had not undertaken a proper consultation before awarding the lease to the Muslim group. The residents were supported by members of the BNP and local activists from the English Defence League.

Political Police Raid Home of CANDOUR Editor

CANDOUR Magazine: Founded by A.K. Chesterton

Veteran Nationalist Colin Todd, editor of Candour magazine, and Chairman of the, A.K. Chesterton Trust, recently received a surprise visit from an estimated 20 police officers from Hampshire constabulary, who claimed they were investigating reports of "shotgun blasts" coming from his location. Considering that Mr Todd's home is located close to Army firing ranges, such loud bangs were not unusual. Mr Todd pointed this out to the Sergeant leading the police team, which included armed officers and dog handlers. Mr Todd also told police that several of his neighbours did legally possess shotguns and used them locally.

The Police Sergeant then asked Mr Todd if he minded if the police searched his house, quiet within his rights as no search warrant was evident, Mr Todd refused. At that point, three officers seized Mr Todd and handcuffed him. The Sergeant, later identified as Sergeant Tucker 1244, told Mr Todd that he was formally being arrested, and would be charged with firearms offences. His house keys were then taken from his pocket, and his house was searched. Mr Todd was not allowed into his house to witness the search. While being held outside by police officers, two loud bangs were heard from nearby. The police took no action to investigate the source of the bangs until a neighbour appeared and asked the police what had caused the noise. A WPC, and a police dog handler were dispatched in the direction of the noise, only to return a few minutes later, gave no report on their findings, just shrugging their shoulders. After searching Mr Todd's house for two hours, Sergeant Tucker informed Mr Todd that firearms charges against him were dropped. Instead, he was being charged with "theft of police property". This charge apparently related to a number of police traffic signs that it was claimed had been found in a shed on the property. Mr Todd denied any knowledge of these items, and has not seen them to this day.

"Community Policing" Hampshire Style

During questioning, the police accused Mr Todd of planning to use the traffic signs to disrupt the Olympics!

Mr Todd was then transferred to Winchester police station, and held in custody until 4pm the following day. Somewhat surprisingly, at no time in the police station, was Mr Todd questioned. After almost 24 hours under arrest, Mr Todd finally released on police bail, still facing charges of theft.

On his release, he was given a copy of the formal, "Schedule of Items Seized" during the search of his property. This document revealed the probable real reason for the search, "Computers taken by Special Branch"!

Political Police Raid Candour Editor

Continued ...

On his return home, neighbours informed Mr Todd that in his absence, the police had brought in floodlights to continue the search of the property all night. One neighbour told Mr Todd that she had seen a white van driving close to Mr Todd's home, and two military-type, "thunderflashes" being thrown from the van. "Thunderflashes" are used extensively on military exercises to create loud bangs, similar to the detonation of a hand grenade.

Even more sinister, was a neighbours report that after Mr Todd was taken away to the police station, the white van joined the other police vehicles parked outside Mr Todd's house!

Friends who had been scheduled to meet Mr Todd at his home, but were unaware he was in custody, arrived at Mr Todd's home and were questioned by police, who took their names and addresses. When one of Mr Todd's friends asked a plain clothes policeman what was going on, the officer replied, "It's just a small political matter".

This type of police harassment is a mystery to all that know Mr Todd. Although a veteran in nationalist politics, he has never been on the extreme "fringe" that existed in a small way within British nationalism some years ago. Mr Todd is the Chairman of the A.K. Chesterton Trust, which exists to promote the memory and the message of Mr Chesterton. The magazine that Mr Todd edits, Candour, while frequently critical of government policies and actions, has never advocated or encouraged readers to break the law. Neither Mr Todd, nor Candour magazine, are, or have ever been, a threat to the State!

Colin Todd: Not a threat to the State

Nothing further was heard from the police until eleven days later, when Mr Todd received a letter from Hampshire Constabulary stating ... "After careful consideration it has been decided that no further action will be taken against you in this matter."

No explanation! No apology!

After careful consideration, including the possibility of further police harassment, Mr Todd has lodged a formal complaint with the, Independent Police Complaints Commission. The details of his complaint are as follows,

As a "false flag" operation, the raid was illegal.
His arrest was unlawful.
His imprisonment was unlawful.
His property (computers) were unlawfully seized.

Mr Todd has pledged to take his complaint "all the way", and we urge readers to give him whatever help and support that they can. We nationalists are not terrorists, and do not support political violence or "armed struggle".

Yes, we want to change Britain and Europe, but by democratic means!

Readers can contact Mr Todd by writing to,
The A.K. Chesterton Trust. BM Candour. London. WC1N 3XX.

Let him know that he is not alone in his struggle. His struggle is OUR struggle.

Judging by recent reports, police officers do not spend all of their time harassing nationalists. One officer from Thames Valley Police, spent much of the past eight years sexually assaulting and raping a young girl. He first raped her when she was just seven years-old.

Aylesbury Crown Court was told that the policeman, 43 year-old Mohammed Younis, had been dismissed from the police, for repeatedly threatening witnesses who had complained against him, and being drunk on duty. Younis was sentenced to 18 years imprisonment. The National Crime Squad, have revealed that up to 50 police officers across the UK, have been arrested for accessing child pornography sites. Eight officers have been charged, with the rest bailed pending further inquiries.

HITLER'S

Britain's recent hosting of the Olympic Games, has been praised by the International Olympic Movement, and competing countries throughout the world. The grandiose opening ceremony drew some criticism, for being perceived as politically left-wing, but it is not the first time that politics have been involved in the Olympics. In 1936, the Olympic venue was Germany, and the new National Socialist government of Adolf Hitler was determined to use the event, to present their, "New Germany" to the world.

The games had been awarded to Germany in April 1931, two years before the NSDAP had come to power.

But, by 1936, Adolf Hitler had already begun to transform Germany from a failing, bankrupt state, to a new vibrant nation, complete with a rapidly growing economy, and pride in the German identity. The games would give him the opportunity to impress the world, and to demonstrate the successes that National Socialism had delivered for Germany.

A new, 100,000 seat Olympic stadium was built in Berlin to accommodate the track and field events.

Even before the games had started, there was controversy caused by rumours that Hitler said that Black and Jewish athletes, would not be permitted to compete. The rumour proved to be unfounded when several Black athletes, including the US sprinter, Jesse Owens, not only competed, but won four Gold medals in the sprint and long-jump events.

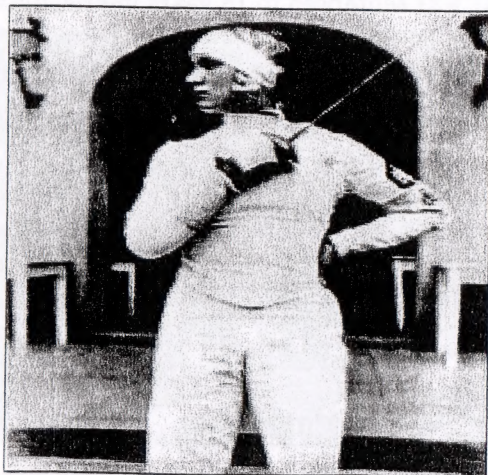

The Germans even included Helene Mayer, whose father was Jewish, in their team.

silver medal in the individual foil event. On the podium, she gave the Nazi salute.

The now familiar, Olympic torch relay, lighting the flame at Olympia in Greece, and relaying it to the host country, was first introduced here at the 1936 games.

The Olympic Flame arrives in Berlin

Helene Mayer: Won Silver Medal

Helene, a championship fencer, returned from her studies in the US to represent Germany, and won the

The 1936 games were also the first to be covered by live television. Although very few people owned private television sets at that time, public viewing rooms were established in several German cities. This experiment proved immensely popular. The games opened on August 1st 1936, and 49 countries took part, up from 37 in the 1932 games, with almost 4000 competitors.

Communist Russia and the left-wing government of Spain boycotted the games, but Spain's plan to hold a rival "People's Games" were aborted when the Fascist, General Franco, decided to start his "march of Liberation" on the day before the games were due to begin. The games were cancelled; the Spanish Civil War had begun!

OLYMPICS

With a keen eye for propaganda, the German Olympic Committee engaged top film producer, Leni Riefenstahl, to film the games. The result, her film, Olympia, is still regarded as a pioneering work in sports filming.

Leni Riefenstahl's Classic Film Olympia

In the United States, calls for a boycott of the games were led by the American Jewish Congress. But, representatives of Black athletes opposed the boycott and supported competing in the games. Support for participation was led by Avery Brundage, of the US Olympic Committee, who argued that, "politics should play no part in sports, and they should never be intertwined". Support for participation also came from US President Roosevelt. With a strong team, the US expected to do well in the games, and at the final count they finished second, behind Germany. The medal count was as follows.

- 1: Germany: 33 Gold. 26 Silver. 30 Bronze. Total 89
- 2: U.S. 24 Gold. 20 Silver. 12 Bronze. Total 56
- 3: Hungary: 10 Gold 1 Silver. 12 Bronze. Total 16

Great Britain finished 10th, winning 4 Gold. 7 Silver. 3 Bronze. A Total of 14 medals.

Then, as now, Medal presentations were conducted by Olympic officials, rather than the head of State, but on the first day of the games, the German head of state, Adolf Hitler, insisted on shaking hands with all of the German winners. That evening, an Olympic official approached Hitler and explained to him that he should shake the hands with all of the winners, or with none. From then on, Hitler did not shake the hands of any of the winners. This decision was later "spun" by sections of the media to suggest Hitler had only refused to shake the hands of US sprinter, Jesse Owens, because he was black. A myth that has been allowed to pass unchallenged into Olympic history!

Owens, who won a record four gold medals at the games, later denied any snub. In his autobiography, Owens explains, "Hitler had a certain time to come to the stadium and a certain time to leave. It happened he had to leave before the victory ceremony of the 100 meters (which Owens had won). But before he left, he waved to me, and I waved back".

Jesse Owens

This explanation, was not convenient for the biased media, and largely went unreported. Even today, the myth of Hitler snubbing Owens is perpetuated.

Since those games politics have been allowed to play a major part in every Olympics. They have been the subject of political manoeuvring and boycotts.

What a pity, the participating nations do not adopt the words of Avery Brundage as the official Olympic slogan,

"politics should play no part in sports, and they should never be intertwined".

France Deports Romanian Gipsies

French police have been ordered to dismantle dozens of camps set up without permission by Roma gipsies, and to deport those found to be in the country illegally.

Many immigrants and refugee support groups thought, that the newly elected socialist government, would take a "soft line" on immigrants, both legal and illegal. But, France's new interior minister, Manuel Valls, launched the initiative saying the deportations "were aimed at ridng France of illegal communities". Mr Valls anticipated that "many of those evicted from the camps would be arrested and flown home to Romania".

Within hours of the plan being announced, dozens of riot police evicted 200 gipsies living illegally in a camp just outside Lille. Similar raids were carried out in several major cities including Marseille and Paris. At each camp more than 100 gipsies were evicted on each raid. Up to 15,000 gipsies were thought to be living in illegal camp throughout France. The establishment of these camps has been linked to an increase in crime and anti-social behaviour in the vicinity of the camps.

Going Home: Police Escort Gypsies to the Airport

Although Romania is a member of the European Union, and its citizens can enter France without a visa, those who wish to work or settle in France must obtain a residence permit.

In a blatant attempt to encourage immigrants to leave France and go to other countries, the French government are considering changing the law so immigrants gathering in French costal towns to attempt to smuggle themselves into Britain, will no longer be arrested by French police.

Migrants Ready to Smuggle Themselves into Britain

Already, one new migrant's camp, complete with showers and cooking facilities, has been built by French authorities near Calais. An estimated 1000 immigrants have gathered there, waiting for the opportunity to sneak into Britain.

When Laszlo Csatory, a 97 year-old former police officer, was accused committing war crimes during the period that Hungary was under German occupation, a group of Jewish students, organised a noisy demonstration outside his house, and stuck swastika stickers on his front door. Mr Csatory, who is under house arrest, and in poor health, told reporters that he had been terrified, and felt in fear for his life.

Young Hungarian nationalists, who felt that Mr Csatory, was being unfairly victimised, used social media to offer a £300 reward for the identity of his abusers. The contact details were swiftly forthcoming, and now police are investigating claims that some of the perpetrators are now being harassed and threatened with violence.

A leading member of the patriotic Jobbik party, upset members of Hungary's Jewish community, when he raised issues in the Hungarian parliament, regarding medieval, "ritual murder" allegations against Hungarian Jews.

For unexplained reasons, this speech was followed by anti-Jewish activities including, the daubing of Holocaust memorials and Synagogues, in various parts of the country.

In a somewhat bizarre judgement, the presiding Judge ruled that as Mr Pastors had used prepared notes for his speech in parliament, his offence was "premeditated". Mr Pastors defence that he was protected by "parliamentary privilege", was rejected by the Judge. Mr Pastors was given a suspended eight-month prison sentence, and fined 6000 euros.

German Youth Takes to the Streets

Hundreds of young Germans, are taking to the streets of towns and cities all over Germany, to denounce the effect of multiracialism and multiculturalism, on the German people.

The demonstrations take place at night, with the demonstrators, who call themselves "The Immortals", wearing "ghost" masks and carried flaming torches.

"die Unsterblichen" : Masks and flaming torches

The group, call themselves the, "die Unsterblichen" (The Immortals) and have been using 21st century technology, to organise "flash protests", giving the police little, or no notice of the planned protest, thus preventing them from stopping them. Most of the demonstrations are over, and the Immortals vanished, by the time the police arrive.

The protest theme is often "Volkstod", ("death of the Volk = Genocide"). The death of German racial identity by multiracialism.

The protests are normally video recorded, and put on to the YouTube social network site, encouraging others to join the protest movement, and in turn become "Immortal". The video message often ends with the slogan, "Your life is short, make it immortal, so those who come after you will not forget that you were German."

Since the protests started, several months ago, police and members of the German Intelligence Services, have conducted dozens of raids on the homes of prominent nationalists, trying to discover details of the Immortals leadership. But it is widely believed, that there is no central leadership, and the group is based on the "leaderless resistance" philosophy founded several years ago by the US based, nationalist, Louis Beam. The philosophy, in which independent covert cells are unconnected, but work towards the same goals, has also been used successfully by various Animal Welfare groups.

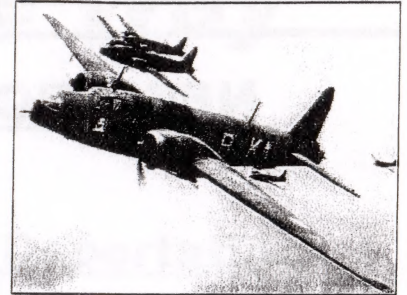

Over 900 armed police officers forced their way into 150 private homes and offices, belonging to members of various nationalist groups, in an attempt to thwart any planned commemorations of the attack in August 1992, on an asylum-seekers hostel in Rostock, which was burned to the ground, watched by over one thousand cheering bystanders.

Lest We Forget

Mosley men were the first official casualties of World War Two.

Seventy-three years ago this month, Britain declared war on Germany. Almost up to the day war was declared, Mosley and the BUF opposed the war. It is therefore ironic that, the first British casualties of the war, were both BUF members. They fought and died, in a war they had campaigned to prevent. This article was written by the late, John Christian of FOM, and first appeared in COMRADE magazine.

Twenty year old AC2 Ken Day and twenty-two year old AC2 George Brocking, both Royal Air Force ground crew acting as volunteer air gunners for the day, died together when their Wellington L4275 was blown out of the sky during a bombing raid by six RAF No. 9 Squadron aircraft from Honington Air Base, Suffolk, on German battleships at the mouth of the Keil Canal. Both died on September 4th 1939 – the second day of the war.

The body of young Ken Day was picked up ten days later by a cargo steamer between Elbe Lightships I and II and buried two days later with full military honours at Cuxhaven Cemetery. The body of his comrade George Brocking was never found and his name is inscribed on the Royal Air Force Memorial at Runnymede, just one of the 20,547 RAF airmen from World War Two with no known grave. Two Wellingtons were lost in the operation – one by anti-aircraft fire, the other shot down by a German fighter pilot believed to be Pilot Sergeant Alfred Held in a BF109 operating from 11/JG77, Nordols, in what was claimed as the first Luftwaffe victory in the War against the RAF.

Londoner George Brocking, and Ken Day from Essex, were non-active members of Mosley's British Union because of RAF service regulations but associated freely with Suffolk members. One old Suffolk Blackshirt remembers them as 'courageous and reliable members' and Brocking's former District Leader and friend described him as 'a grand and splendid lad, fond of fun and with an ever ready smile – yet his frequent discussions on the problems of the time, and the British Union's remedy for them, revealed an intelligence far beyond the average.' Ken Day, a happy-go-lucky character, had volunteered for, and been accepted by, the RAF's Advanced Striking Force for operations in France on Germany.

They would have died as they lived: with a smile on their lips, conscious of the odds against them, but fighting to the end – an outlook on life that as Mosley men they would have felt and understood.

These two young men were the first of many members of British Union whose bones lie scattered over four continents, including those who had suffered previous unjust internment under Regulation 18B. Those of us who came back searched in vain for those laughing young faces who had marched three-abreast with us in Mosley's great demonstrations before the War. First, they had fought to prevent the War believing it not to be in the real interests of the British people. Their whole being was to build the Britain of their dreams: free from poverty, free from slums and free from the curse of war. Had they lived they would have seen in 'victory' a Britain relegated to a small island in the Northern seas and a Europe weakened and divided by Soviet Russia and the United States.

Fortunately, they did not live to see the land they loved descend to the state of a Banana Republic. They did not choose to live and shame they land from which they sprung. And while many brave young men died believing they were fighting in a just cause, it does not slight their memory for us to say of our British Union comrades who fought and died knowing it was an unnecessary war that 'Theirs was a greater glory'. The early deaths of Brocking and Day will remain an example of the honour and purpose of those who followed Mosley – a symbol for future generations to arise and reveal to posterity the further truths of the Mosley story.

To those present-day politicians who continue with the lies of their predecessors; to that contemporary establishment baked in progressive liberal thought; to the tabloid hacks who would still decry our story of Brocking and Day and all our Blackshirt dead we say:

'Lie, Smear, Defame them all you want – for you may touch them not.'
